Paint Creek Trail Mile-Markers

As recently as 1974, the Paint Creek Trail was a railroad corridor. The Detroit and Bay City Railroad Company built the rail line in 1872, connecting Detroit to Bay City. Michigan Central Railroad later acquired the line and developed the mile-marking system in the late 1890s. Each mile-marker contained the letter "D," signifying "Detroit," and a number that represented the distance in miles from the center of Detroit to that point. These markers are metal, diamond-shaped signs and are found at 1/2 mile intervals along the trail. Additional rectangular mile-markers have been located at each gate, bridge and road crossing. In an emergency, identify the nearest mile marker you saw so that the location can be pinpointed, and dial 911.
